LORD BOBERTS ON THE ARMY.

What "Bobs" has to any about the Army is what the Army and the nation want to beat. And Lord Roberts says his say to the extent of five-and-twenty page in the current number of the Ninestead Century. He article is largerly historical, since his object is to draw a comparison between the Army "as it was and as it is further enforced by the experience of the Ninestead Century. He has also at an advanced age and howed by personal trouble with astonishing vigor commanded and led to victory. He has also at an advanced age and howed by personal trouble with astonishing vigor commanded and led to victory. He has personal trouble with astonishing vigor commanded and led to victory the largest army that we have every part into the field, fighting under conditions as far removed from those under which hord Roberts first saw service as is the khaki uniform from the bright costees and ounibrous stocks in which the Peninsular campaigns were fought. Lord Robert's claims to reverence, respect, and admiration rest on a sure basis of experience and devotion to the highest sease of duty.

It is on his advice that interest will be fired. The historical comparison in extremely interesting, and it leads to the reasoned optimism of a great soldier. In 1854 the British Army, at home and abroad, totalled 133,980 men, with 120 field guan. There was no Reserve and no Volunteer Force. With the Militia and Tomathy went far and the most 200,000 men. These mes were incessably diffield, but bely trained; our western to their gallantry; the whole force was great and the British Army went far and the minute of the second of the manner were not taught to shoot in it days of point-blank ranges and close forms and ammumiliation. Since then by degrees we have adapted our forces and our weapons and the manner were not taught to shoot in its days of point-blank ranges and close forms and ammumiliation. Since then by degrees we have adapted the remove the remover the comparison that the service attention and we have always that can revivify, and to all appearances our War Office is still inboard with the spirit that has done its best to kill the Army and the Empire. There has been a deal of indding with Army Corps and Districts and territorial designations and buttons and overcoats and the minuties of drill. But the Army is as insufficient and insufficient as it was before the South African War showed us terrible things. If we desired an illustration of the permanence of 'bad tradition (fortunately good tradition, courage and tenseity, and self-confidence, is equally permanent in the British Army), we could not have a better one than Lord Roter's story of howat teradopting the Armstrong gun, our first braschloader, in 1859, we returned air years later to mural-loadens for our artillary. This brilliant notion can only have smanated from the same source as the amazing apactay, which left the British Army in 1904 without the searchial supply of quickfiring field-guns which had been tested, approved, and promised a year previously. Ovivously we must lay this demon of incompetence in organisation. mised a year previous this demon of inco slay this demon of incompetence in organisation before we can turn with much hope of their application to the reforms suggested by Lord Roberts.

application to the raisons suggested by Lord Hoberts.

It is not, however, too much to hope that even our troglodyte authorities will pay the compliment of attention to these suggestions. Lord Roberts urges the importance of the Caralry arm. We must add iargely to the numbers of our cavalry and the officers must be much more highly trained. To effect this, without undue interference with the polo and hunting which are "in moderation" so valuable a training for a cavalry uffect, they must be better paid. If we want the best we must pay for the best and make the service attractive to those whose abitties are good enough to ensure success in other professions. We must also have a very large body of Mounted Infantry, not less than ope-fourth of the Infantry establishment. Then since in modern warfare the outroit and guidance in action must pass to company commanders and section leaders it is "essential that a estion must pass to company commanders and section leaders it is "essential that their intelligence, self-reliance, and poper of leading should be on a proportionately higher level." Volleys being things of the past and so much depending on sources of air man fire discipline, "special attention should be paid to individual acre and courts of ammunition." The necessity for higher training and for the services of men as officers and non-commissioned officers. The neces-ne services of med officers,

"special attention should be paid to individual one and control of ammunitum." The necessity of property of ammunitum." The necessity of the property of ammunitum." The necessity of the property of ammunitum of the necessity of the property of the necessity of the property of the necessity of n

SANGUINARY RELIGIOUS DISPUTE.

JERUSALEM, January 8 A sanguinary dispute occurred here between the Latin and Greek clergy whits the latter were performing the Christman midnight mass. The Patriarch was officiating at Bethlehem. The Latins were apparently the aggressors, for when the Greek coclesiastics in aggressor, for when the Greek ecclesiaties in ventments were issuing from the northern contrained the Grotto of the Nativity, the Franciscan monke hard their way and a collision enused, with the result that one Franciscan was zeriously wounded and the Patriarch's jainssay alightly so. The Governor of Jerusalem went to the Grotto. Notwithstanding their exclusive ownership of the eastern entrance, the Greeks were ultimately allowed to passe through the northern does, hence the jealousy.

RECEPTION AND REVIEW.

RECEPTION AND REVIEW.

Yesterday's Khedivial reception was largely titended, and from an early hour aumbers of victors made their way to Abdeen Palace. The Diplomatic Agents and Consuls, the Ministerant the Advisers, the heads of department, and many of the chief officers of the British Army of Occupation attended the reception, with a multitude of officials and notables. While it was in progess, many tourists and aight seers paid visits to Abdeen-square to watch the arrival of those who attended the reception, and to make guesses, sometimes very mistaken ones, at their identity.

Cairo was favored with bright, if cool, weather. The streets, in consequence of the general holiday, were crowded, and the square before the Khedivial Opera House, the neighbourhood of Abdeen, and the Edeltich Gardens were gaily decorated.

The afternoon's review was a remarkably fine sight. The appearance and marching of the troops was very good, and the cavalry, both when trotting and cantering post, went by splendidly, better even that last year. The galloping Maxims coased a good deal of interest to an enormous concours.

The management of the crowd-these man have been more than 10,000 persons round the parade-ground-reflects great credit on the police, however, did well—there was no unconsume concours.

EGYPTOLOGICAL RESEARCH.

During the past year a strong local committee of Liverpool men in connection with the University of Liverpool has been formed to promote the study of archivology, and has been strengtheard by side well-known names in this connection as those of Dr. Arthur Evans, Mr. Hilton Price, Prof. Ridgeway, and Penf. Royd Dawlins. They have stabilized, in addition to a small but fairly complete library, a meseum of Egyptian antiquities, presented for the most part by the local partons of Egyptian exploration, such as Sir John Brunner, a meseum of Egyptian exploration, such as Sir John Brunner, Mr. William Johnston, and Mr. John Brankin, Many of these were discovered by Mr. John Garstang, he newly appointed Lecturer in Archeology, and there are to be found here the duplicate inversibles of Aha, found by him at Negadah last year, many of the other objects exhibited by him at the Society of Antiquaries in the summer, and an entirely representability scaleting the summer, and an entirely representability week by Lady Alice Stanley fitty inaugurated the Institute, of which the Princes Henry of Battenberg is the patron; and the course of lectures antounced, which helded the archaeology of Greece and Western Asia, as well as that of Egypt, leave nothing to be coas Henry of Battenberg is the parton; and the course of lectures antonuced, which include the archaeology of Greece and Western Asia, as well as that of Egypt, leave nothing to be desired. THE UBIQUITOUS FIEND.

Some call it Influenza A simpler term is Grip— The name were better Legion (Of ills that it lets alip). One says he has the toothache; Another binds his ear; A third cries 'Little Mary's Distinctly out of gear!'

'A bronchial affection'
Makes this man croak and wheeze,
While that man's quite exhausted
With trying not to sneeze. 'I wish you'd rub my shoulders!' A dismal wight exclaims; And 'How my head is splitting!' Another lamb complains.

Alas! All red and swollen Alas! All red and swousn Is someone's pretty nose; And 'Why is your eye bandaged?' The same thing, I suppose! You want to go to dances ! You've got to stay in bed And drink my nasty med'cine,' Was what the Doctor said.

'Now light your little kettle, And rub your little chest, And gargle very often. And try to sleep.' (A jest) T've brought a little blister That's sure to do you good; It's only Influenza.' (With this they all conclude)

As though it did not matter,
As though it were a joke
Which you were bound to suffer
Along with other folk.

CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

To THE EDITOR OF THE EGYPTIAN GASETTE

CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

To THE EUTPLIA GARETTA

Dear Sir.—Among the short pasagraphs inserted above the initials "T. A." under the heading "Under the Mesquito Net" in your issue of the Sita December last, the writer, in referring to "casee of real destriction worthy of help." incidentally alludes in anything but complimantary terms to the Charity Organisation Society, which he (or sho) most unfairly denominates that "Shom of Shams."

As an old subscriber to the abused society and a thorough believer, from knowledge, in the good which for years past has resulted day by day from the fulliment of the duties which the society in question has undertaken to perform, I cannot but think that "T. A." must have written his condemnation with but scank knowledge of facts, and perhaps will not object to my attempting to set him right and ton yr trying to prevent the injury which such comments might, if uncontradicted, inflict on a most descript institution.

The Charity Organisation Society was not instituted for the administration of charitable funds, but for the guidance and assistance of the charitably disposed who might desire their contributions to the aid of their less furturant fellow-creatures should not pass into unworthy channels or assist in parpersing, instead of behings, these who might desire these furturants fellow-creature should not pass into unworthy channels or assist in parpersing, instead of behings, these who might be willing although temporarily unable to support themselves and those dependent yone them.

Prom my own personal knowledge the society would be the last person to "turn a designa" to any case of real distress which might come before him. It is not however part of the duty of this particular society to divert the proper employment of the finds to "seeking out" masses of distress, or to put itself into competition with other cinstitutions, whether clearitable or rate sided, whose functions are different from its own, and which may be much better qualified to perform the work to which y hich your correspondent refers.

Yours faithfully,
